

2014

Editor's Introduction

Danielle St. Hilare

Follow this and additional works at: <https://dsc.duq.edu/first-class>

Recommended Citation

St. Hilare, D. (2014). Editor's Introduction. First Class: A Journal of First-Year Composition, 2014 (1). Retrieved from <https://dsc.duq.edu/first-class/vol2014/iss1/4>

This Front Matter is brought to you for free and open access by Duquesne Scholarship Collection. It has been accepted for inclusion in First Class: A Journal of First-Year Composition by an authorized editor of Duquesne Scholarship Collection.

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION

By Danielle St. Hilare

In the following pages you'll find wonderful examples of many different kinds of writing: argumentative essays, literary and cultural analyses, and studies of problems facing our world today. While their topics and aims differ, they are alike in their excellence. These six essays were produced by students in Duquesne University's First-Year Writing program, and they won top honors in our annual competition. Of the many essays submitted to this competition, these were the finest—and they truly are excellent examples of what motivated, talented, hard-working students can produce.

The faculty and graduate students of the English department teach the first-year writing classes (“Thinking and Writing Across the Curriculum” and “Imaginative Literature and Critical Writing”), but the students in the classes come from across the university. This year the prizewinners represent three of the University's nine undergraduate schools: Business, Health Sciences, and Liberal Arts. Our goal for the first-year writing classes is to provide the space where Duquesne's diverse students come together and have a common intellectual experience. The students here examine everything from the portrayal of Hollywood in the novel Day of the Locust and the film The Player, to the need for financial literacy among Duquesne students, to the impact of technology on our lives. Our students are engaging with the world, with creative texts, and with the conditions of their own lives. They are doing what students in a first-year writing class are supposed to do, and doing it impressively.

Although excellent, these essays are not perfect; I have declined to line-edit them because I want the Duquesne community to see what its first-year writers are actually doing—and to show our incoming freshmen what they can realistically aspire to produce. These essays show minds struggling with complicated issues; they are a snapshot of a process of thinking.

I'd like to thank all of the graduate students and faculty who undertook the task of judging these essays. This year, our judges were Ava Cipri, Jess McCort, Matt Ussia, Clint Benjamin, Lindsey Albracht, Jo Sullivan, and Michael Begnal. Thanks to all of them for their hard work, and particular thanks to Nora McBurney, Rob Hein, and Will Powell for their admirable administrative work. As ever, I'd also like to thank the Office of the Provost, whose support keeps this contest and journal going; Lia Morrison and the staff of the Public Affairs office, who design and produce this journal; and of course all of the magnificent instructors in the First-Year Writing program.